

Obama Plan Would Leave Employer System Intact

BY MARY ELLEN SCHNEIDER
New York Bureau

With Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) set to become the Democratic Party's presidential nominee this month, health care experts are once again scrutinizing his plans to reform the health care system.

The centerpiece of Sen. Obama's plan is a public-private system that would allow people to remain in their employer-sponsored health plans while offering the uninsured the chance to purchase either a private or government-sponsored plan.

For the government-sponsored plan, the proposal uses as a model the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program—the system available to federal employees and members of Congress. For individuals and families who want to purchase insurance on the private market, Sen. Obama is proposing to create a National Health Insurance Exchange through which they could enroll in either the new government-sponsored plan or purchase a private plan.

All plans offered through the exchange would be required to offer at least the same coverage as the government-sponsored plan and adhere to the same standards for quality and efficiency.

Employers also would have a role to play under the Obama plan. Those employers that do not offer or contribute to employee health coverage would be required to pay a percentage of their payroll toward the cost of the government health plan.

There would be an exemption for some small employers under the proposal.

The Obama proposal also calls for expanding eligibility for Medicaid and the State Children's Health Insurance Program. Under the proposal, the government would offer subsidies to individuals who do not qualify for Medicaid or SCHIP but still needed financial assistance to purchase health insurance.

Sen. Obama also would guarantee that no American could be turned down for health insurance because of illness or a preexisting condition. However, his proposal stops short of requiring all Americans to purchase coverage. Instead, the plan mandates coverage for children only.

The other half of Sen. Obama's plan is aimed at reducing premiums and decreasing overall health system costs. For example, he would target the catastrophic health expenses that account for a significant portion of the costs incurred by private payers. Under his plan, the federal government would reimburse employer-sponsored health plans for a portion of the cost of catastrophic health events above a certain threshold. In exchange, the plans would have to use the savings to reduce the cost of premiums.

Cost control also is addressed in the Obama plan, with electronic health records playing a big role. The candidate proposes to spend $10 billion a year for the next 5 years in an effort to encourage adoption of EHRs. The plan also seeks to control costs through greater regulation of insurance companies and by allowing the federal government to negotiate drug prices.

The Obama campaign estimates that, if implemented, the reforms they are proposing would save the average family about $2,500 a year in medical expenses.

But the plan continues to face critics on the left and the right. Grace-Marie Turner, president of the Galen Institute, an organization that favors free-market approaches to health care, said she is concerned that the government-sponsored program would be underpriced and crowd out the private insurance options the same way that Medicare has crowded out private insurance in the over-65 market. "That is not a level playing field," said Ms. Turner, who also is an adviser to the presidential campaign of Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.).

Sen. Obama's approach is really a "backdoor" to getting everyone on a government-funded health plan, she said. Sen.

Obama's plan also faced criticism from the left. Dr. Don McCanne, a senior health policy fellow with Physicians for a National Health Program, said the plan "falls far, far, short." Dr. McCanne said he objects to the plan because it continues to use the private health insurance industry as part of the structure. His organization favors the elimination of private plans and the creation of a single public program for health care.

The concern with providing a government-sponsored plan in competition with private plans is that it would be subjected to adverse selection and the premiums would become unaffordable, Dr. McCanne said. The only way around that would be to provide more funding through taxes or to have a method of risk pool transfer, in which the private plans with healthier beneficiaries would shift funds to pay for the higher risk individuals, he said.

But Dr. Jack Lewin, CEO of the American College of Cardiology, said that maintaining the private system is politically smart. One of the drawbacks of Sen. McCain's plan is that it has the potential to destabilize the existing employer-based coverage system, he said. (See "McCain Plan Relies on Tax Changes, Cost Control, June 2008, p. 25, or www.ecardiologynews.com.) While in the long-term it might be a good idea to move away from that system, that should be a gradual process, he said.

Dr. Lewin also praised the Obama plan for starting with coverage for children. But after the mandate for universal coverage of children, the plan's details are somewhat murky, he said. ■
